Environmental Humanities Lecture

Configurations of Climate Change in Science, Culture, and Society: Negotiating German Culture in an Age of Environmentalism

Professor Sabine Wilke
University of Washington, Seattle

Monday, October 8
4:00 - 5:30 pm
206 Ingraham Hall

Sabine Wilke is Professor of German at the University of Washington, Seattle. With support from the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, she directs a transatlantic research network on the environmental humanities and is working on a book project about environmental criticism, in particular the overlapping concerns of postcolonialism and ecocriticism. In 2013 she will be a senior fellow at the Rachel Carson Center of the University of Munich.

Recent publications in English include:
- special issue on “The Environmental Humanities” of Pacific Coast Philology 46.2 (2012);
- “How German is the American West? Visual Constructions of Landscape.” Observation Points: The Visual Poetics of National Parks, ed. by Tom Patin (Minneapolis: U of Minnesota P, 2012);

Sponsored by: UW Center for German and European Studies, European Union Center of Excellence, and the Department of German
For information: http://daadcenter.wisc.edu/